the opinions and wishes of Chinese officialdom generally on the dispute with Russia, there can be no doubt that the desire of the native merchants and traders is strongly in favour of the maintenance of peace. More especially is this the case with those engaged in foreign. trade. A war would seriously interfere with business and bring many native merchants to ruin. Moreover, the wealthy among them would, in all probability, be called upon to contribute the necessary funds, with faiht hope D. Sassoon, W. H. Brereton, W. K. The Treaty of Livadia was so eminently unsatisfactory from a Chinese point of view that no one can feel surprise that it was rather hastily rejected, but it is another matter for China to decide whether she can afford to flout a great Power Llike Russia. Calmer counsels have prevailed over the first wrathful outbursts, and Ch'ung-How's sentence has been remitted in order to allow of fresh negotiations being opened with the Russian Government. While, however, the prospects of a pacific settlement of the Russo-Obinese difficulty have clearly improved, there seems reason to believe that the seeds of dissension and jealousy, long ago sown between the Court party and that which recognizes Li Hung-changasits lender, have lately sprung up with surprising vigour, and threaten to result, sooner or later, in Orders for Copies may be sent to the Duily some sort of a revolution. THE COST OF TEA

Common China tea is said to coat about 2s. v wt. to pick and cure-under exceptionally favourable circumstances. To grow it as well costs perhaps 20s. per owt. Auothor 20s. pa owt. is levied by the Chinese Government in the shape of the 24 per cent, transit and 5 per cent. export duty -or a specific charge of 13s, per owt. while Japan commutes a like 5 per cent. export duty into a specific 6d. per owt. If then China common tea is thus handicapped with 100 per cent. of fiscal levies, what wonder is it that the lightly taxed Japan and Indian growths are oushed into consumption Were it not for these local duties of 20s. per conform its levy to the 5 per cent advalorem specified in the treaty, and to commute this, like Japan, into a specific export duty of 6d, per owt. If there was any possibility of sending tea to Lendon at 60s, per owt, the 56s, per owt. English import duty would, there is good reason to believe, be struck off by the present Chancellor of the The women in China (says Giles in his Exchequer whose aim has always been a free breakfast table; and tea, freed 75s, in duties 19s. Chinese, 56s. British), would reach the consumer at 60s. where it now costs 135s, ber cwt. The United States have struck off their shilling import duty, and the present is, we think, a favourable conjuncture at which to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to allow tea as in the United States, to outer free. It is also easy at this time for the three Powers chiefly concerned in the trade to make a concerted demand that tan thus freed at home, shall be allowed by China to have her ports taxed with a no heavier specific duty than that at present boing nominally the same in both countries. SPRING MEMORIES. Once more the happy song-birds sing; Once more soft airs around us bring The dear realities of spring; And all our hearts go forth to great Its treashron springing at our feet, Half and, because they are so sweet. For 'mid the beauty all around, Some added grace of sight or sound May strike the depths of loss profound; 'And o'en the violets to our thought Bring yearning memories unsought, Out of their very sweetness wrought I our own grief too long we dwell, Omwi used to serrow, till its spull Koops us from realising well, How, c'en above death's lone abyss, The birds our treasures do not miss, But sing, unhindered in their bliss, While roicoloss silonce falls between The strength whotoon we love to lean, And all the hopes which might bave been. So sad it seems that life moves on, Building its outward joy unon The hidden graves of treasures gone ; That as of old the dawning breaks Through all the eastern heavens and makes A glory, ere the world awakes : That Lenten Blics still unfold In sunny moons their hourded gold, As though no want this life could hold. It may be that the past appears Most fair, when only through our tears We see its unreturning years; Yet could we, if we would, forget While over all things lingers yet This sweet intengible regent? Oh, springtide glory, helding fast

"All dear memorials of the past,

Lift us to nobler hope at last!

Speak to us, not of death but life,

Nor loss, but victory after strife;

Until, through these, our souls shall rise

THE LOTTERY IN FLORENCE. Florentines are very found of gambling, but in the smallest kind of a way. They become as much excited over a two-sous stake as others would be over two thousand francs. The public lottery is their " true, true love." Such infatutation and superstition I never The last continue they owned in the world was not safe from that villanous institution. Year after vest of constant less never serves to convince this confiding people that they can gain nothing, unless by a great etroke of most exceptional suck. The lottery consists of ninety numbers, five of which are drawn every Saturday, at two o'clock, in the public square. During the week the gambler selects his number, staking his money upon the chance of that number being one of the five drawn. According to the amount risked is the sum won. He may also bet on two numbers, or three, or four, or all five. This naturally lessens his chances of winning, but it increases the amount he would win, should his numbers be drawn. However, one rarely bets on all five numbers, winning in such a case would be almost a miracle. And yet, most curiously, such a thing once happened. First, let me explain that with the Florentines every occurrence in life has all over the city was tremendous. This was temporarily a fearful stroke of illluck for the National Treasury, but gained by it enormously in the end, the people's credulity having been so strengthened by this extraordinary coincidence as to cause them to bet more rashly and blindly than ever. A few months after this event, while the circumstance was fresh in every mind, a story got about that a monk. had made his appearance in Florence, and with great solembity and impressiveness had predicted five other numbers that would be infallible. Of course, the whole town rushed pell-mell to the lottery office, and the result was as might be expected-disappointment. Not one of the numbers predicted was drawn. The excitement was so intense that there were rumours of mobbing the monk, but the next thing heard was that he had quietly left Florence on the day of the drawing. So long as this outrageous system of gainbling is legalised, so long will the Italians be poor, for every centime is saved to be hopelessly swallowed in this 'nccursed institution .-Sribner's Monthly.
